VULGATE

Jerome took up residence in Bethlehem and spent next 2 decades on the task of producing the Bible in Latin which would be standard throughout the Church
His bible replaced the Old Latin Version (the Itala)

Tervingi-Vesi (Vesigoths)

FOEDUS with Theodosius.

Settlement in the north of Thrace.

Theodosius I (the Great) settled the military situation in the east by a four-year war against the Goths ending in a peace treaty in 382. This set a dubious precedent by allowing the VISIGOTHS to settle on lands within the empire under the authority of their own king rather than any imperial officials and the right to fight in the Roman army as allies rather than regular units.

382 A.D.

Jerome wrote his Latin
Vulgate

Oct 3, 382

A treaty was ratified (probably the most famous FOEDUS in Roman history). The exact details are not known but the following:

- (1) Goths became subjects of the empire but remained barbarians & as foreigners had no (rite of marriage) with Romans
- (2) They were allotted tax exempt land between the Danube & the Balkan mountains
- (3) The assigned land remained Roman sovereign territory but the Goths were considered autonomous
- (4) The Goths were obliged to under military assistance to the Romans, but their own tribal leaders were to receive only subordinate commands. (5) as portners, the Goths lived with the provincials

(6) Gothic federates were entitled to annual payments in an unknown amount The emperor was hoping the Goths would be a substantial boost to the military forces along the Danube frontier.

382 AD

The Canon of Sacred Scripture, the official list of the inspired books of the Bible was contained in the "Decree of Pope St. Damasus" and published by a regional council of Carthage in 397

The Canon was formally defined by the Council of Trent in the 16th century

382-C.406

St Jerome translated the Old and new Testaments into Latin. His work is called the Vulgate version of the Bible.
